Chandelier 1100-4 "St. Florian"

The Wrought Iron Family

This little chandelier was used for a church in Austria following the style of the Renaissance period. Through the use of wrought iron this chandelier is a very modest and simple item but still emanates the air of a precious piece of hand crafting. This is especially useful for hallways or rural cottages. Lovely details are the Globus Cruciger on the arms and the masterly crafted double-headed eagle in the centre. The item is made from hand-wrought iron. It is then finished with black lacquer to give it an even and dark surface.
